Hayden Harris prepares for the drive.

Emily Hamm in action on the green.

Emily Hamm first started playing golf as soon as she could pick up a club. She says she didn't start getting serious about the sport until the 8th grade, however.

"I really started developing a love for the game about the age of 13." Hamm enjoys the mentality of the game.

"You have to keep [your focus] during the entire round.

If you doubt yourself, or even give up slightly, you're not going to do good. It's all about self-confidence and realizing your capabilities," said Hamm.

Hamm remembers the district tournament during her sophomore year as her favorite memory. The boy's team made it to regionals, and Hamm was medalist.

"Everyone was so uplifting of each other and so excited to see what would come next."

She is undecided about whether golf will play a role in her future. Hamm says that she is still praying about it, which gives her a lot of peace about the situation.

Hamm has decided on a career, however, as she is planning to pursue a nursing degree.

Hayden Harris

"I love the medical field, and labor-and-delivery is my hands-down favorite thing to study."

Hamm is the daughter of Chuck and Rhonda Hamm.

Hayden Harris began playing golf as a freshman. He enjoys that the sport "takes my mind off of stuff that bothers me. And I love the scenery of all the courses. It's beautiful."

Harris played in the "Pros of Tomorrow" tournament at 15 years old, and says the Tupelo event was so much fun to play in.

Harris plans to attend Jackson State Community College, and hopes to pursue a career in the golf business after playing during his college years.

Harris is the son of Reggie and Christie Harris.
