The Six-Word Story

After discussing "cell phoneography" in journalism, the students were assigned a six words, six shots poster board assignment.

Students were told about the legend of "The Six-Word Story". So the story goes.... Ernest Hemingway, while lunching with friends, made a bet that he could craft an entire story in six words. After the pot was assembled, Hemingway wrote the following six-word story: "For sale, baby shoes, never worn." Hemingway won the bet.

Students were challenged to create their own six-word story and then shoot/print six photos to go along with the story. The story was to summarize their summer, COVID-19, and/or the school year.
